There's something strange about this one. Could be games being played in the background. Doesn't seem like a standard revenge or terrorist move.

>But there is an even more sinister potential reason than this for the attack. Rather than bomb the far more prominent AT&T skyscraper just two blocks away, the attacker centred on a more discrete AT&T facility that is "brushed" from Google Maps and Google Street View.

>This suggests that the target is very possibly a key node in America's NSA spy network, and gives the attack a much more anti-Deep-State character.

>Two years ago The Intercept reported on AT&T's extremely cozy relationship with America's Deep State >article identified eight key facilities but did not identify Nashville. Either Nashville is a recent addition to the list or had an even higher role in this hi-tech Deep State network and therefore greater secrecy.

Why would they do that, if they know those are the most protected places in the country.
Red Stone Arsenal is more than likely target number one or two, that's in north Alabama, they'd also nuke Ft. Campbell on the border of Tennessee and Kentucky.

The rabbit hole will go deeper.

The human remains will be identified as the RV owner. The RV owner will then be revealed to not be a suspect.

The terrorists, whoever they were saw an RV and paid the Iron Price(tm) to obtain it. The hapless owner probably thought they had found a potential buyer on Craigslist or something and earned a bullet in the back of the head.

What I think happened.(roughly)

RV dropped of at 1:22
Bomber leaves area via car or boat
5:30 gun shots are played in 10 minute intervals to wake people up and attract police to help with evacuations when the bomb is announced.
6:00 warning message is played explaining that there's a bomb in the RV, not to approach and that there will be a count down, mixed with music to gather attention, this is repeated X times.
6:15 timer countdown begins, announcing every minute, at 0 the "evacuate now" message we have all heard is played for roughly 5minutes on repeat, then boom.

The bomb was probably ANFO, between 500kg to 1000kg (1000lbs-2000lbs) packed in two or three containers/bags, which would explain the bouldering explosion, it detonated slowly/partial combustion, and didn't all go off at once, leaving lots of black residue on the street.
The RV was possibly lined with sandbags or similar on the left side and back to make a "shaped charge", but I'm skeptical considering the added weight might be a problem.

Possible motives in random order:
Ted Kaczynski inspired.
Anti surveillance agenda.
Show of power and ulterior motive with manifesto/demands to be released at a later time, threat of repeat incidents.
Crazed person who hates AT&T for schizo reasons.

Side not for comparison:

We know that alot of grids went down but havent heard about the security systems going down?
And the way they made shure to make a house call and warning the residents that whatever it was they were going to do would have to be after the explosion.
It could also be ff to make searching all rv's going to the 1/6/21 rally for boogaloo toys.

Or a political player playing a nasty game.

With only possibly one casualty would the US have enough to strike back against a state actor with? (Worth going to war for?) Or would they just have to sit there with an Angry Wojack face. With the whole thing being a calculated risk wagering the US would in fact be able to do nothing directly back.

The person responsible will be identified as a Trump supporter, and when being taken into custody there will be a shootout in which the man in question will be killed. This is important as he will be unable to give a defense and the investigation will be closed despite significant questions remaining unanswered.
The media will label this attack as "trump terror" or something to that effect, and will claim trump is inciting terrorist groups with his rhetoric of election fraud. this coverage will be round the clock and be discussed for months, long after the investigation is closed.

This is will cause normies to want to distance themselves as far as possible from the maga brand and trump, causing republican politicians to make a hard choice between losing trump supporters and being round the clock named and shamed in the media.
This Lack of support for Maga and trump supporters, coupled with Joe Biden getting into office, will see him unleash government agencies on trump supporters as well as push for another assault weapons ban. He will do this in the name of curbing "Trump Terror" as "I want unity but you can't unify with terrorist." Couple this with an increase in these attacks by "Trump Terrorists" and he will have a perfect excuse to do it.

As this goes on, Investigations will be launched into trump supporters and their information will be leaked to the public either because they are being investigated or are brought to trial on terroristic threats, ultimately the investigations will yield little results, but it will succeed at what the deep state wants. First, it will keep trump supports busy and throw there lives into chaos, which will prevent them from properly organizing. Second, it will see normies distance themselves even further for trump supporters and they are painted more and more like crazy people. Third it will give the far left names and faces to target and harass.
The goal is to punish trump supporters for daring to challenge the establishment, scare the public into accepting even more draconian measures of control, and to ensure the deep states power is never threatened in the way trump did.

However, what it will do is create more radicals on both sides, as the far left feels vindicated and justified, and the maga crowd feels persecuted and constantly under threat. The right wing will got even more underground while the left will take over, tech censorship will be on a scale never before seen, expect them to just flat out remove any right wing figures and to run smear campaigns on any site that platforms them.
This hinges on Biden getting in, but even if he doesn't don't expect these terroristic attacks to go away if trump wins. They will still happen and the media will still run with it, but without biden then they will lack a person to sign the legislation and enact the orders to see the results the deep state wants.

Why the warning? Why give an audible countdown of 15mins, which by the way, gave a lotta people time to evacuate, and according to witnesses, didn’t go off for another 10mins after that. Why would a terrorist attack, or a false flag give such a big warning? Witness said it was a robotic female voice counting down. It’s this warning that doesn’t fit the usual motives.

the biggest clue in this whole mess is this: why was there a 15 minute warning to evacuate the area playing over a 'loudspeaker'?

this doesn't fit the mould of a terror attack, it's clear there were attempts made to prevent (or at least limit) the number of casualties .
>aforementioned 15 minute warning >done in the early morning on a national holiday terror was not the goal here, so we're left with a few options. was it done to temporarily disrupt aspects of the communications network (911, air traffic) as an aspect of something bigger? doubtful, it would be difficult to predict the effectiveness this attack would have in severely crippling the network. For example, Nashville police say they didn't start experiencing widespread issues with the 911 system until 12pm.

as it stands I think this a dry-run of how effective and disruptive this kind of attack on network infrastructure is and how quickly AT&T can get their network functionality back to 100% operational norms

So far:

No claim of responsibility.

No body found (suicide).

What we know:

It happened on Christmas, so most people were not going to be in that area (because of covid, not much people were going to be there anyway).

It was rigged to warn people in the vicinity and it gave them ample time to leave the area.

My guess is that whoever did it, did it to show a simple message. That message is:

Hey, look what I can do.

>A literal voice alarm warning people to evacuate the area
>A RV repurposed to do... something

I'm almost certain it was an accident of some sort.
What puzzles me is the safety alarm. It's almost as if there was some device monitoring a reaction and it went critical unintentionally. If this was some sort of garden shed scientist's experiment I don't think they would have bothered with the health and safety alarm, unless it was something extremely dangerous... Which I guess it was but, I dunno.

I'm 60% sure it wasn't a government agency.
You would have thought the police would have broken in to the RV and had a look, maybe they did and there's no mystery within official channels and that's why they tried to evacuate the area. Which is why I'm only 60% sure.
It could have been that the police were aware of the van, the fact it was owned by a government agency, and ordered the police to evacuate the area.
It is strange.

This guy @kr3at on twitter has the best threads and speculation that I've seen so far. His Twitter bio says he's an independent journalist. He pointed out that that at&t building has no windows like most NSA data centers do. Also showed that the targeted building is clearly reinforced because all the impact bounced off the walls and back into the street destroying the buildings across the street.

Could be part of the WEF's plan to establish "cyber lockdowns" and/or provoke power/Internte outages. Like Event 201 for Corona, they had a planning exercise for this last summer:

https://www.weforum.org/agenda/2020/06/covid-19-pandemic-teaches-us-about-cybersecurity-cyberattack-cyber-pandemic-risk-virus/

Someone claimed somewhere that this AT&T infrastructure info might have been obtained from the recent SolarWinds hack.

Credits to Ice Age Farmer for watching the situation on these cyber exercises, and how recent cyber attacks seem to tie in with them:

Testing US local communications infrastructure prior to the 6th? Apparently Nashville's primary airport was forced to shut down as the damage done to that building temporarily knocked out vital communications systems for aircraft control.

Could also just be a disgruntled ex employee, or guy with a court case that went poorly for him. It's really still pretty unclear, that being said I will say if it's politically motivated the timing makes no sense. Both sides are pretty aware of the fact that everything's still up in the air until the sixth.

You obviously barely know the history of the IRA. If it was just an attack of conscience then why were there specific words known to media outlets like RTE and to charities with call in hotlines. These words for example Double X was used for the Birmingham bombings but was done too late, Docklanfs used code word KerryGold. These code words were used to make it explicit that the bomb threat was a real one.

Actually it absolutely does fit a method of terrorist attack. It was common practice to issue slightly misleading warnings at incorrect times to get more people INTO a blast zone, not out of it. The bomb went off before the countdown too, it's entirely possible the bomber was attempting to get people out into the street so maximize casualties, don't forget the bomb went off before the countdown was finished. The problem with that theory is if they wanted to maximize casualties why would they perform the attack at 6am on Christmas day when people weren't likely to be out and about?

this, bomb was most likely targeted right towards the concrete well, which explains why the only other damage towards the other buildings was reflected blast damage (i.e blown windows etc), and as an anon said, it wasnt that the bomb was powerful, but it burned VERY hot. my take on it is first of all, whoever did this had insider knowledge about the building, and their might have hit the optic fibers, which are notoriously easy to btfo. why? i dunno, shit is definetly glowing, and an obvious attack. not a terror one though, otherwise you wouldnt choose christmas day at 5am along with playing 20 minutes of warning signals and shooting 3 series of rounds minutes before so you could wake people up.

If it were an employee there are way more subtle ways to cause damage like this and get away with it so its not an employee.

Only thing of value there wouod be the Akamai co-locate or Firstnet. Other COs have this too and are way softer targets.

Copypasta but I agree

AT&T got a contract to do forensic audit on Dominion voting machines and those machines were being moved to Nashville.

The former owner of the ATT building in Nashville was Cerberus Capital Management.

Dominion voting is owned by Cerberus. Cerberus is run by Staple Street Execs.

Joe Bidens Bro in Law is the cofounder of Staple Street

Staple street is run by former Cerberus Execs but also former Carlyle Group execs.

Cerberus and Carlyle need no intro here on GLP.

Remember who benefited from MH370 disappearance? Freescale Semiconductor got the patent as a result of the 4 Chinese dudes dying. Freescale is owned by Cerberus

11+6 = 17 , the seventeenth letter of the alphabeth is Q

Q is a codename for a sector of the army aligned with Trump

17 domino downed by baionett = Q is now down and killed

>Q obtains dominion servers in frankfurt in a raid where 5 delta forces and 1 CIA get killed >dominions server are brought to nashville for forensic probe

>there is proof of rigging
>the deep state is in fear everything is revealed >the op that posted photo is deepstate cianigger agent >CIAnigger steal the proofs and disintegrate the server in a huge explosion in nashville >proof disappear, it is now in the hand of the bad guys

IT/Spec Ops anon posts on 12/24/20 of a bunch of clues in his first pic consisting of: Sierra Nevada CELEBRATION edition Fresh Hop IPA Beer, these are seasonal and only availble during winter months, common in the US.
Leaning towards this referencing the Sierra Nevada mountains in Spain, even though it's a California beer that also has the Sierra mountain range in its boarders.

>No way a typical civilian carried this out

Questionable. The lack of casualties makes motive more clear, as well as the warning and the timing.

Only "conspiracy" angle would be that he wanted the network down at a very specific time / place due to something sensitive going through there. However if this was his goal, there are many easier ways to do it than securing the amount of explosives required to produce the blast that happened. Blowing something up from the outside requires a fuckton of explosive and you have no guarantee everything you want to go boom across the street is going to go boom. Would have been way easier to run the van up alongside the building if that was their goal.

It lacks all the signs of a false flag. No immediate suspect - no pre-cooked narrative. Timing and method are all off. If it is a false flag, then it's the kind that is meant to be ignored or buried. The DC Sniper met this kind of criteria, but was real - insofar as the MO was so outside of the typical "mass shooter" narrative a-la Sandy Hook or similar that people didn't treat it the same as normal mass shootings despite the fact that this was a real threat to a lot of people out in the open.

If anything I think it was a civilian, and ironically one that wanted to live. Even McVeigh had a deadman trigger if the first two failed. This guy seems to have made a lot of nitro, but did not shape-charge it into the building or get close enough to really crater it. Maybe lacked the materials, knowledge, or money to do it. After all, not everyone can get oil drums full of jet fuel...

>Or did this just cause a bump in ATT networks yesterday

That's the thing. Datacenters are redundant for a lot of reasons. Blowing up one building isn't really going to do shit to networks or traffic. Even if a major hub like Dallas was quite literally nuked, there are datacenters all over the country and they'd just route around them.

It would take more time - make no mistake. It'd take a lot of tedious work to route DNS lookups or all the traffic that would run through a hub to now route around an area that was destroyed, but it's not like there's a single line that runs across the US. That's the whole point of it being a network.

That said, I'm more of the mind that if it was committed by the government, it was done so as a distraction. Something inside may have been stolen or tampered with. The blast was just not big enough to do real damage, and if they wanted something specific inside the building destroyed, then the blast was just a distraction to get people into the building to destroy or steal whatever it was they wanted.

Trying to destroy specific hard drives or server racks in a building like that with a bomb like the one that was used is just stupid and implausible.

You said going through there. I'm way up in Pittsburgh and was affected by it. My son has ATT phone and service, took family Christmas photos at 2, didn't get delivered to my Samsung via Verizon until 3:30.

We probably have different definitions of "affected," because a 90 minute delay due to routing around a down (or in this case, attacked) data center doesn't strike me as a huge deal.

But then the whole fact that it doesn't would be the conspiracy angle. Like I said: one that's intended to be ignored, or dismissed with a surface-level motive.

Also, it's clear who the culprit was.

You can hear the hissing sound before the explosion if you listen closely and I bet there will be gunpowder somewhere dropped.
